About the Carnegie Bosch Institute

The Carnegie Bosch Institute is a unique alliance between the renowned Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania (USA) and the Bosch Group, a leading global supplier of technology and services in the business sectors of mobility solutions, industrial technology, consumer goods, and energy and building technology, headquartered in Stuttgart (Germany). The Institute was established as an entity within the Tepper School of Business at Carnegie Mellon in 1990 through a major endowment provided by the Bosch Group. The Carnegie Bosch Institute is positioned at the intersection of academia and industry. The mission of the Institute is to improve international management and leadership by advancing the understanding of both managers and researchers of fundamental issues related to global business. In order to do this, we sponsor five academic chairs, fund research projects focusing on the management of international corporations, and provide innovative executive education programs targeted to the needs of global executives and companies.
